EDUCATION in four dimensions...

TAYLOR UNIVERSITY BULLETIN

In the United States there are 364 accredited colleges of arts and sciences with an enrollment under 1,000. Of this number, only a few are interdenominational private colleges in the evangelical Christian tradition.

Taylor University is one of these.

The purpose of this pictorial booklet is to give you an informal introduction to Taylor—"Since 1846, An Effective Christian College."

A Taylor education offers a vital PLUS—the spiritual dimension, which, added to the academic, social, and physical, provides a rich and rewarding educational experience.

. . . Education in Four Dimensions

The importance of the years spent in college and your selection of the right school can scarcely be over-stated.

During college days philosophies are explored, beliefs are investigated, knowledge, insights, skills and ambitions are acquired which exert a life-long influence.

Each college has its own personality. Every school leaves its own mark indelibly stamped upon her graduates.

Taylor has a distinctive personality. Her faculty and students, the spacious campus, a rich heritage dating back to 1846—these are a part of her delightful and scholarly atmosphere.

But Taylor is more than these; there are intangibles—the exceptional friendliness, the personal interest of sincere, competent professors, the collegiate spirit, the Christ-centered emphasis, the interdenominational fellowship, the campus government concept—these contribute to the uniqueness of Taylor.

It is this total personality which attracts the kind of young people who study at Taylor University.

THE PURPOSE of Taylor is to educate.

Taylor University provides liberal arts and pre-professional training in an academic community where recognized scholarship is combined with a high standard of Christian living.

Sixteen major fields of study are offered in six divisions, leading to the A.B. and the B.S. in Education degrees. Seven pre-professional courses are offered, including affiliation programs in engineering, law and business with state universities.

For most persons, happiness is found in striving toward meaningful and realistic goals. There is no more lasting service to a young person than guiding him in the formation of such goals. Taylor's personal student-faculty relationships, which provide maximum teaching efficiency with attention to individual needs, make this kind of guidance not a fanciful concept, but a working reality.

Taylor seeks to lead students to self-discovery and the shaping of goals in accordance with God's will, so that each may become the person he can and should be. This deeply involves moral and spiritual, as well as intellectual, growth and spells the difference between secular and Christian education.

Taylor is accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and by the State Board of Education in Indiana. Memberships include the American Council on Education and the Association of American Colleges.

The 40,000 volume Ayres Alumni Memorial Library provides excellent facilities for research, for completing assignments, for private study in many fields of interest, and for browsing.

The college is conducting two research programs in radiation biology and a radioisotope training program sponsored by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, and directed by noted scientist-teacher, Dr. Elmer Nussbaum.

Practical training is offered in radio and TV.

The Taylor Civic Symphony, the Symphonic Band, and the Marching Band perform with the finesse born of hard work and able leadership.

The fine arts provide opportunity for creative expression and the development of artistic skills.

The acclaimed "Trojan Players" dramatic group presents several major productions annually, and performs frequently in neighboring cities.

The A Cappella Choir and Men's Chorus travel extensively in addition to making numerous campus appearances. Highlight of the fine arts year is the annual Festival, three days of concert, drama, music, and art displays.

The well-groomed campus presents an inviting atmosphere for meditation, for study, for leisure.

The stately, tree-lined landscape symbolizes the rich heritage and traditions of the college, and the firm spiritual foundation on which Taylor stands. This setting, in its natural beauty, is part of the wholesome, healthful environment which makes life at Taylor such a never-to-be-forgotten experience.

TAYLOR PREPARES students in a thorough and practical manner for effective Christian service in many professions. Classroom work is supplemented by varied opportunities for practical experience in campus religious services and organizations, gospel team work, student pastorates, a variety of musical groups, and personal evangelism activity.

At Taylor your life will become enhanced with a deepening sense of purpose which adds dimension and meaning to living. This is the glory of the true Christian college—that it breathes the air of reverence which forms the fabric of wisdom. The college continually points the questing student beyond the gathering of facts and the classification of data to eternal Christian values.

Part of the essence of Taylor is her interdenominational fellowship. Students and faculty members represent more than thirty evangelical persuasions, nearly every state and several countries. This cosmopolitan setting provides a broadening educational experience in which you will gain understanding and insight, and where you will establish life-long friendships.

Taylor is a family of friends studying, working, playing, debating, singing, praying together in a world of discovery and new ideas which you will find exciting and challenging.

Informal discussion sessions by noted guest lecturers stimulate student minds.

The claims of Christ and the need for Christian service are forcibly presented during annual Missionary Conference.

Greatest spiritual event of the school year is the Annual Youth Conference.

AT TAYLOR you will be looked upon as a growing, maturing individual. Here you will find in operation the highly progressive "community government" concept in which the student plays an important role in his own education. Students have a voice in guiding and planning campus affairs as they serve on student-faculty committees.

The student council sponsors an ambitious co-curricular program which stimulates social and personal development. Professional and social clubs, the student newspaper and yearbook, all-school banquets, class projects and parties are among the many popular activities. A wide variety of social events, guest lectures and concerts are a part of the program the college provides for the four-dimensional education of the growing student.

Colorful, formal banquets are always memorable occasions.

There's no lack of college spirit at Taylor. These cheerleaders rally the fans to the support of Taylor's athletes.

International Day, sponsored by the International Club featured guest speakers, displays, popular foreign meals.

Orientation leaders assist the Dean of Students in the week-long program to acquaint new students with Taylor life.

The traditional blends with the new in the ultra modern food service center and Morris Residence Hall for men.

AN UNUSUAL combination of intercollegiate athletics and Christian citizenship is part of the unique campus life which is Taylor. The physical education program, which includes intramural athletics for both men and women, provides training and experience under the guidance of well-qualified Christian coaches.

A member of the Hoosier College Conference, Taylor participates in all major intercollegiate sports.

"Trojan" teams have brought recognition to the college by their championship play and good sportsmanship.

... a word from the President

As a young person about to make the decision concerning college, you stand on the threshold of the most challenging era in history.

Today's young people are confronted with unprecedented opportunity in a fast-moving world. In the fields of Christian service, the professions, in business, science, government, and in the home, new and creative roles await you.

New industries and new vocabularies are born—literally overnight. Nuclear power, space, automation, chemotherapy, linguistics and many other frontiers are being penetrated.

But an even greater challenge is the conquest of inner space: the development of spiritual commitment and maturity, the discovery of yourself, your abilities, your interests.

We invite you to visit us. We believe that the more you know about Taylor, the more you will appreciate her unique role as a Christian college. Should you desire to join the Taylor family, it will be our high privilege and responsibility to make your years with us memorable and fruitful ones in which you will discover God's will and prepare for a life of satisfying service.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in dark ink, reading "B. Joseph Martin". The signature is written in a cursive, flowing style.

B. Joseph Martin
